Both events are offered to our members at no cost. This is our way of showing our appreciation to our members.

St. Louis-area Freelance Luncheon Series: TechWrite STL

Joanne McAndrews, PhD
Lisa Balbes, PhD

St. Louis-area freelance Mid-America chapter members have been holding bi-monthly luncheons with St. Louis-area Society for Technical Communication (STC) Consultants and Independent Contractors (CIC) since September 2006. At each meeting, a topic of interest to freelance medical and technical writers is presented by a member and then discussed with the group, usually over lunch at a local restaurant.

In January 2013, members voted to change the name of this group to "TechWrite STL".

Ruth Kaufman gave the presentation at the March 2013 luncheon, "Libraries: Resources and Remedies". Ruth discussed why, in the age of home Internet access, libraries are still relevant. She highlighted the services offered by the St. Louis County Library system, the Saint Louis University libraries, and the Washington University Bernard Becker Medical Library. Attendees were interested.

to know that the St. Louis County Library offers free services such as Book a Librarian and Book a Trainer (for assistance with a computer, tablet, or e-reader). In addition, Ruth noted that for $275 a year, one can purchase a membership at the Washington University Bernard Becker Medical Library and access their materials.

“How Do You Structure Your Time?” was moderated by Joanne McAndrews in May 2013. She reviewed some popular time management strategies, including David Allen’s Getting Things Done, the Pomodoro technique, the Personal Kanban method, and the Action Method. Attendees shared their strategies for managing email, keeping track of tasks, and their own productivity tips. Additional topics discussed included meeting deadlines, whether participants found deadlines to be motivating or paralyzing, and to-do lists.

Upcoming 2013 luncheons include “Developing a Logo for your Company” to be presented by Jan Niehaus in July; “Reinventing Yourself for today’s economic realities” to be led by Dana Delibovi in September; and “Lessons Learned from Self-Publishing” to be presented by Pat Dorsey in November.

Lisa Balbes and Joanne McAndrews are the co-organizers of this group. Please contact them at lisa at balbes dot com or joanne at joannemcandrews dot com, respectively, to be added to the mailing list for this group—new members are welcome, as are suggestions for future luncheon topics and volunteer presenters.

Magdalena Berry, Newsletter Chair
I teach a course for technical writing students about writing in the healthcare industry. The course comprises a broad overview of the industry and the various genres involved, from patient education brochures to the documentation produced during the drug development process.

Most of my students don’t have a science background, and few have thought much about health communications in any form other than the occasional pass at WebMD. They’re in unfamiliar territory, and so they get to use their skills in audience analysis, professional writing and editing, document design, and research in new ways.

One of the topics we discuss is scientific publication, with a focus on ethical issues. I thought you might get a chuckle out of an exam response I received this semester:

“Ghostwriting is when someone writes or finishes a document or study after the main researcher has died or stopped participating. The basic idea is that someone takes over or writes for someone else under the other’s name.”
